Follows in his fathers footsteps in rare occupation

Young tower clock repairman

By DAVID BAUM

For Robert Rogers of Rogers Clock Service, repairing the tower clock in Carbondale City Hall was similar to the work he had completed on many large church and other tower clocks.

But for the residents of Carbondale, who helped make the repairs possible by donating the $3,000 needed to make the repairs, it was something special. It was their city hall tower clock he was repairing, their clock which had fallen silent for years after telling city residents when to get up, go to work, school, lunch and when to go home. Residents were extremely enthused last week because Robert Rogers was fixing their clock!

And the extreme interest in repairing the clock was very evident to the young repairman, who wasn't used to seeing so many people caring so much about a clock.

"You can really see the interest, I guess getting this clock repaired means more to
